

Immigration Medical Exam Doctors list

Welcome to Toronto Package

If you apply for permanent residence, you will need an immigration medical exam from your home country or in Canada. Your dependants (a spouse, common-law partner or dependent child of a permanent resident or principal applicant) will also need a medical exam, even if they are not coming with you.

When you go to your appointment, you must bring:

- Identification (at least one document with your photograph and signature, such as a passport, driver's license or national identity card)
- Eye glasses or contact lenses, if you wear them
- Any medical reports or test results that you have regarding previous or existing medical conditions, immunization records, and
- Medical Report form (IMM 1017E), if you are not doing an "up-front" (before submitting your application) medical exam. The visa office will send you this form.

Tell your doctor about any current or past medical conditions. If you do not do this, processing your medical exam and immigration application could take longer.
